Bikes for Tikes

Students from Becky Boes' sophomore English class at Carroll High School have raised $550 to buy eight bicycles — four for girls and four for boys — for local children in low-income families through their Bikes for Tikes problem-solution project. The students raised the funds by selling punch cards for meal discounts at Pizza Ranch. They were inspired by their own childhood memories of learning to ride, and the bicycles will be donated to New Opportunities, which will distribute them to area children. Helping with the project are (from left) high school students Brett Snyder and Albina Tigges; Abby Bueltel, New Opportunities Family Development Center coordinator; student Michaela Thompson; Mary Greving, New Opportunities Family Development Center supervisor; and student Matt Pauk.
